This research was supported by funds from the Florida Department of Education, the U.S. Department of Education under the aegis of the National Center for the Analysis of Longitudinal Data in Education Research, and the National Institutes of Child Health and Human Development. We are grateful to the Florida Department of Education for providing the micro-level data necessary for this analysis, as well as considerable technical and programmatic support and advice. We appreciate the helpful comments of Sherrilyn Bilger, Jon Guryan, Jeff Henig, Larry Kenny, David Myers and Miguel Urquiola, as well as seminar participants at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, Iowa State University, New York University, University of Chicago, University of Florida, University of Illinois, and Vanderbilt University/National Center for School Choice, and participants at the annual meetings of the Association for Public Policy Analysis and Management and Southern Economic Association. All opinions and errors are our responsibility, and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Florida Department of Education, the U.S. Department of Education, or the National Institutes of Health.
